

The Unconscious

By Antony Easthope

1992. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 182 pages. English There is no dearth of articles, book, monographs on the wide gamut of population, fertility behavior, birth control, family planning and the family welfare programmes as well. That more or less applies to the more recent avatar i.e. reproductive health, and it is unambiguously clear that most of the initiatives; even those ones which are offered as singularly innovative remain immersed on beaten tracks and thus come out as singularly predictable. The fudgy academic and research scenario notwithstanding, there is an imperative need to take reproductive health programmes beyond the military and market metaphors (for example target, demand, unmet need). Our experiences also convey that the approaches and policies in this regard must move past neoMalthusian arithmetic and beyond contraceptive prevalence in understanding how the social arrangement and inaccessible health system provide rural women difficult proposition to regulate and manage their reproductive career. Beyond Contraceptives is thus in tune with Mahmood Mamdani's understanding that motivation for family size originate in social and cultural experiences, not in pumped-in propaganda and education from above, which repudiates the reality of social experiences people have. Rejecting neoMalthusian maxim that poor profligate, the narratives offered through the...
