Excerpt: . the play The whole action is concentrated in a single setting, within a period of 24 hours. The scene is a narrow street in the London Jewry. High houses stand right and left. The street is closed at the back of the stage by a Gate-house, beyond and above which is seen a strip of sky, pierced by the slender spire of a church outside the Jewry. The Gate-house is a strong erection of stone, perhaps twice the height of a man. It is closed by heavy doors opening inwards. Seen to the right of the gate, as part of the Gate-house, is a small door raised the height of three steps; this is the entrance to the Gate-keeper s quarters. On the left, also part of the Gatehouse, is a low archway closed by shutters. The houses on the left side of...
