Army Engineer Waterways Experiment Station, 1995 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)41869863 Subject: Wetlands -- Classification. Excerpt: . . . Figure 1. Diagram expressing the relative contribution of three water sources: precipitation, groundwater discharge, and surface flow. Location of major wetland classes ( bogs, riverine, etc. ) within the triangle shows the relative importance of water sources. Boundaries drawn between classes should not be interpreted as distinct; rather, gradients between classes are continuous ( Brinson 1993b ) Purpose of the Guidebook This document is for use by a team of individuals who adapt information in this guidebook to riverine wetlands in specific physiographic regions. By adapting from the generalities of the riverine class to specific regional riverine subclasses, such as high-gradient streams of the glaciated northeastern United States, the procedure can be made responsive to the specific conditions found in ones region of interest. For example, it may be necessary to separate wetlands associated with high-gradient streams from those associated with low-gradient streams in order to reduce the amount of variation in indicators and to make the assessment more sensitive to detecting impacts. This guidebook is not called an assessment manual because manual connotes a procedure that can be taken to the field and immediately applied. The guidebook is not for direct application by environmental consultants, agency personnel, and others who assess wetland functions. For the guidebook to be useful, it must first be modified, calibrated, and tested to determine its effectiveness under local and Chapter 1 Introduction 5 This item ships from La Vergne,TN.
