I then rose, and being graciously supported by the presence of my God and my Saviour, said, Thank God you cannot rob me of my Christ--you cannot deprive me of the comforts of religion. I feel this moment as much as ever I did in my life, that God is mine and I am his, and although you have dis severed me from one section of the church of God I can join another, and these are my supports and consolations in this grievous trial. Thus, Sir, despotism immolates its victims: and having obliged pious and conscientious men to leave their quiet and obscurity to oppose its encroachments, it punishes their opposition as a crime, and, in the name of God, drives out from his churches the objects of his love! But among the defences of your power, none is more exactly adapted to its...
